

Driving $49.8K in Revenue with a Creative-Led Meta Ads Strategy

Beauty & Personal Care eCommerce | United States | Meta Ads | 3 Months

BUSINESS OVERVIEW

The client operates a Beauty & Personal Care eCommerce business in the United States.

The business already had potential in its offline market, but the client wanted to build online revenue through Meta Ads.

The client had previously run Meta Ads but was not satisfied with the results. He came to us to develop a more effective approach to customer acquisition and online sales.

Project Objective

Build a structured Meta Ads sales campaign that could generate measurable online purchases and revenue while creating a repeatable foundation for future scaling.

THE CHALLENGE

THE CLIENT DIDN'T NEED ANOTHER CAMPAIGN. HE NEEDS A BETTER APPROACH.

The previous advertising efforts had not produced the expected results.

Instead of immediately launching another campaign, I first needed to understand where the opportunity was being missed.

The key questions were:

- How was the business positioned?
- How were competitors communicating similar products?
- What was happening in the client's previous advertising?
- What type of content could communicate the products more effectively?
- How could the campaign give potential customers different reasons to consider and purchase the products?

The challenge was therefore bigger than campaign setup.

The campaign needed a stronger connection between business positioning, creative content, campaign structure, and purchase behavior.

RESEARCH & DIAGNOSIS

I STARTED WITH THE BUSINESS, NOT ADS MANAGER

Before launching, I researched four areas.

01 - Business & Product Research

I studied the client's products, business positioning, and online sales opportunity to understand what needed to be communicated to potential buyers.

02 - Competitor Research

I reviewed competing Beauty & Personal Care brands to understand how similar products were being positioned and promoted.

03 - Meta Ads Library Research

I analyzed competitor advertising activity in Meta Ads Library to identify common creative approaches, messaging patterns, and opportunities to differentiate the client's communication.

04 - Previous Advertising

I reviewed the client's previous advertising experience to understand the gap between running ads and generating meaningful sales.

Key Finding

The problem was not simply that the client needed more ads.

The campaign needed a stronger creative communication system.

That became the foundation of the strategy.

The goal was to create creative variety while keeping the message of each asset focused.

CAMPAIGN STRUCTURE

ONE SALES CAMPAIGN WITH CONTENT-CATEGORY-BASED AD SETS

Once the creative direction was established, I launched the sales campaign.

The campaign used:

- One core sales campaign
- Content-category-based ad sets
- Multiple ads

The reason for organizing the ad sets by content category was to create a structured environment for allocating and evaluating budget across different creative directions.

Rather than creating many separate campaigns, the campaign remained concentrated around the core sales objective.

The creative system provided the variation.

CAMPAIGN LAUNCH

THE FIRST MONTH WAS ABOUT LEARNING THE ACCOUNT

After launch, I did not immediately remove every creative that was not generating the highest number of purchases.

This was an important decision.

The creatives had different communication purposes.

A direct-response creative could be expected to generate purchases.

An awareness or consideration creative could have a different role in the overall communication system.

Therefore, I wanted enough performance data to understand the campaign before making aggressive creative cuts.

During this stage, I continuously monitored:

- Purchase performance
- Cost per purchase
- Creative response
- Content-category performance
- Overall campaign efficiency

I also maintained regular communication with the client and reported the campaign's progress and next optimization opportunities.

OPTIMIZATION

MONTH TWO: FILTER WHAT WASN'T WORKING AND DEVELOP WHAT WAS

By the second month, the campaign had generated enough performance data to identify stronger creative patterns.

At this stage, I began filtering weaker creative directions.

But I did not simply duplicate the strongest ad.

Instead, I looked at the underlying winning angles and recommended developing new creative variations around them.

The process became:

- Identify stronger angle
- Understand the message
- Develop a new variation
- Launch
- Compare performance
- Refine

This allowed the campaign to build on proven creative directions while continuing to introduce variation.

SCALING

MONTH THREE: SCALE GRADUALLY, NOT AGGRESSIVELY

Once stronger creative directions had been identified, I gradually increased the campaign's scale.

The objective was to increase purchase volume while continuing to monitor acquisition efficiency.

The scaling decisions were guided by:

Spend → Purchases → Cost per Purchase → Revenue → ROAS

The campaign was therefore not scaled simply because it was producing sales.

It was scaled while monitoring whether the economics remained strong enough to justify additional investment.

FINAL CAMPAIGN PERFORMANCE
METRIC		RESULT
	Website Purchases	313
	Revenue	$49,859.25
	ROAS	7.05×
	Cost per Purchase	$22.58
	Ad Spend	≈ $7,072
	Reach	209,470
	Impressions	825,253

THE RESULT CAME FROM A DECISION-MAKING PROCESS

The campaign's performance was built through a sequence of strategic decisions rather than a single tactic.

1. Research before launch

I investigated the business, competitors, Meta Ads Library, and previous advertising activity before deciding how to approach the campaign.

2. Identified the creative gap

The client needed more than campaign setup. The advertising needed a stronger content and messaging system.

3. Created focused creative messages

Each creative was given a clear communication purpose instead of forcing multiple messages into one ad.

4. Structured the campaign around content categories

The sales campaign used content-category-based ad sets to organize the creative system and budget allocation.

5. Allowed the first month to generate learning

I avoided premature creative cuts and monitored how different creative directions performed.

6. Identified stronger creative angles

In the second month, weaker directions were filtered and stronger angles became the foundation for new creative variations.

7. Scaled based on performance

The campaign was gradually scaled while monitoring purchase volume and acquisition efficiency.

That sequence was the real strategy:

Research → Creative Strategy → Structured Launch → Data Collection → Filtering → New Variations → Controlled Scaling

BUSINESS IMPACT

- Established Meta Ads as a measurable online sales channel.
- Generated 313 website purchases from the campaign.
- Delivered $49,859.25 in tracked revenue.
- Achieved a 7.05× ROAS with a $22.58 cost per purchase.
- Built a structured creative system for ongoing testing and optimization.
- Created performance data to guide future creative and scaling decisions.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Research the business and market before launching.
- Give each creative one clear communication purpose.
- Use multiple creative angles to address different customer needs.
- Allow enough time and data for meaningful creative evaluation.
- Develop new variations from proven creative angles.
- Scale gradually while monitoring purchase efficiency.

CONCLUSION

The project started with a simple challenge: previous Meta Ads efforts were not delivering the expected results.

I addressed this by first researching the business, competitors, previous advertising, and creative opportunities. From there, I built a focused creative strategy, launched the campaign, analyzed performance, refined winning angles, and scaled gradually.

The key lesson was simple: strong Meta Ads performance comes from better decisions throughout the process-not just from launching a campaign.
